1. “Distributive Justice”
Multidisciplinary project
http://www.distributive-justice.com/
2001– ongoing

The multidisciplinary project “Distributive Justice” is a work-in-progress designed by people with different backgrounds (art, philosophy, sociology, economy, programming). The project deals with the topic of distribution of goods in a society. It consists of two parts: (1) the part of the project in virtual space, URL: www.distributive-justice.com – Internet games in which participants in the project freely distribute material and nonmaterial goods building a “society” that undergoes dynamical changes; several types of societies emerge as result of the distribution games; and (2) the part of the project in exhibition space, a “working space” installation – presentation of material that has emerged and continuously emerges as a result of the respective parts of the project: virtual (the web site), practical (field research, opinion poll); and theoretical part (study of relevant literature, open discussions, talks, lectures...).

The material grows and changes its shape from exhibition to exhibition. Since several different countries have been involved in the project, every country left its imprint in the work, i.e. becoming a part of the exhibition. During the exhibition(s) the visitors (participants in the project) read materials, listen to lectures, chat, join the discussion, participate in the polls, surf the Web, print from the database, copy materials, video or audio tape the events, etc. The countries so far involved in the project: Italy, Germany, Austria, Croatia, USA, Australia, Turkey, UK, Slovenia and South Korea.
The project is based on an interactive game played on the Internet. Choosing among different genetically determined traits, the players (participants in the project) create virtual embryos – their own virtual progeny. The created embryos are exhibited in an “embryo gallery”. In the second phase of the project the society of virtual people created by Internet users is compared with the inhabitants of a “real” society.

Monthly reports containing data analyses of these results were issued during the first 6 months of the project. All Internet users willing to take part in the project were invited to join the mailing list, discuss the actual issues of genetic engineering and cloning, comment on the presented ideas, etc. During the first six months 6 presentations and discussions were organized on the topic of cloning and genetic engineering in different places (university, gallery space, NGO etc.) All presentations and discussions were taped and exhibited as part of the “workspace” in the galleries, where also a series of pro and contra discussions on genetic engineering and cloning were held as part of the piece.
Nama: 1908 employees, 15 department stores
In-situ project
2000, WHW, Zagreb, Croatia

Nama is a chain of department stores that were particularly successful in Croatia under the socialist regime. NAMA comes from “NArodni MAgazin”, which means “The People’s Shop”. These shops, which were condemned to bankruptcy by the country’s economic development, have been in the following paradoxical situation for the last few years: they have practically ceased all activity, but are kept open by the employees who occupy them. Andreja Kulunčić pasted a portrait of an employee with the title “Nama – 1908 Employees, 15 Department Stores” on ten of the best advertising spaces in central Zagreb. Based on the resources, values and places of the advertisement, a public debate was started concerning the economic transition of Croatia. The employee on the poster symbolizes the individual and collective disasters which accompany the changes in the Croatian economy.
4. “1 CHF = 1 VOICE”
Political art intervention
2007 - 2008, Shedhalle, Zurich, CH

The project was a tool for the illegalized persons in Switzerland* through which they were able to attain visibility on the political and public level. The Sans-Papiers (undocumented immigrants) were invited to donate ONE FRANC for the renovation of the Swiss Parliament (the Parliament building was under renovation at that time), through the account of SPAZ (Center for Illegal Persons). The Parliament is a public voice of the country, and in addressing it they were addressing their request to Swiss society. The donation was a present, but at the same time it was a call for political attitude towards Sans-Papiers in Switzerland to be “renovated”, and a continuous dialogue about their precarious living and working conditions.

The project consisted of:

- AN OPEN INVITATION TO ALL SANS-PAPIERS - through flyers, billboards, newspaper adds, NGOs, direct contacts and other means, to participate anonymously in the action.

- PUBLIC COUNTING - in the media and on the web site of the action the people were able to follow the amount that has been paid into the account for donations.

- DONATION - the end of the action was a donation of the collected money to the Parliament. The Parliament first agreed then refused the donation, so the money remains at the SPAZ account until a more open government towards illegalized workers come to power.

* The activists estimate that about 300,000 undocumented people are living in a precarious situation in Switzerland, the “official” number is 80,000
5. “RECONSTRUCTION”

RECONSTRUCTION OF AN UNIMPORTANT DAY IN OUR HISTORY

Video documentary, 12 min duration
2007, Tikves Castle, Croatia

The video reconstructs one day in the life of Josip Broz Tito (undisputed president of Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia for 35 years) during his free time in the Tikves castle. As a passionate hunter, Tito often spent time in the Tikves castle, game hunting with his wife Jovanka or with foreign politicians. The Tikves castle complex, an Austrian hunting castle, was built in the 19th century. It is situated within the nature park Kopacki rit (Croatia), near the Croatian-Serbian border.

RECONSTRUCTION OF AN IMPORTANT DAY IN OUR HISTORY

Video documentary, 12 min duration
2007, Tikves Castle, Croatia

The video reconstructs the meeting between Franjo Tudjman, the president of Croatia, and Slobodan Milosevic, the president of Serbia at the time. The meeting was held in Tikves castle on April 15, 1991. First conflicts in arms in Slavonia (Croatia) broke out in the beginning of May, 15 to 20 days after the reconstructed event. The war reached Tikves in September 1991. For a period of time the castle served as the headquarters for the Serbian paramilitary group, known as the Arkan’s tigers.

6. “WOMEN.INDEX”
Interactive project
2007 Split, Croatia / 2012 Napoli, Italy

“WOMEN.INDEX” is a participative project which was developed in Split (Croatia) and Naples (Italy) in collaboration with women, not only those who visit the exhibition, but primarily chance passers-by, because the posters spent some considerable time at busy urban locations in both cities. The aim of the project in which the artist employs viral strategies, since she uses popular mainstream templates to reach her target audience, is most importantly a motivation for women to define and raise awareness about their individual role in the familiar and broader, social context calling the listed cell-phone number and answering the question asked by the answering machine: How do I feel? and selecting one of the possible answers: satisfied, discriminated or abused. The next step of the project was live statistics, showing the percentage of selected answers every day in public, as well as on the interface display in the gallery space.
At the focus of the project are latent prejudices and the creeping discrimination against foreign workers in Austria. With top-quality, well-designed job advertisements, ‘inferior’ jobs are offered to Austrians only, including all the restrictions and disadvantages with which otherwise mostly migrants see themselves confronted.
“On the State of the Nation” project is the result of a year-long research on the topic of social distance, focusing on the presence and constructions of the image of the Others in the media, with a special emphasis on the local environment of Zagreb. The project evolved in several phases: through research (a questionnaire), collaborations with experts from various social and humanistic sciences (anthropology, sociology, philosophy, and psychology), intervention in the mainstream media, and organizing workshops and round tables during the gallery exhibition.

By questioning various ways of treating those who are perceived as the Others in the local context, in terms of differing from the common matrix — be it in their sexual orientation, colour of their skin, or religion, Andreja Kuluncic has explored the new ways of increasing tolerance and, even more generally, of creating the possibilities for deconstructing the otherness in the Croatian society. On the one hand, the artist has collaborated with a number of individuals, organizations, and informal initiatives that may be characterized, on the basis of earlier research, as the Others with respect to the dominant social paradigm; on the other hand, she worked with those who are actively involved in increasing tolerance, as well as with the public media.

In cooperation with journalists and members of social minorities, a sort of virus news have been published in the Croatian media, forcing the dominant white, male, Catholic-Croatian citizen, precisely while he is reading his favorite sports news, to remember uneasily the existence of the Others: homosexuals, Chinese, or Roma, who likewise constitute the Croatian society and who share one and the same social and living space.
9. “Commercialization of history”
   Intervention in public space
   August 2010, Island of Korcula, Croatia

Korcula statute - the oldest legal document of the South Slavs was the inspiration for the artistic action.

For five days the artist sold souvenirs on the island of Korcula. The souvenirs themselves were made by applying articles from the old Korcula statute onto cheap items from China. The texts were in English, Croatian, Czech, French and German. The artist's stand was set among the existing city stands at the entrance to the old town of Korcula. Instead of money, the cost of the souvenirs was expressed by a number of questions that potential buyers needed to answer. That is, potential buyers gave interviews to the artist in exchange for a souvenir, answering questions about the commercialization of history, the good and bad sides of (mass) tourism, and about respect for the city of Korcula and its past and present communities.
CREATIVE STRATEGIES is a multidisciplinary research project which deals with the origin, development, meanings and effects of creative strategies on the individual and on the wider social community. It consists of three working segments, conducted simultaneously: (a) theoretical research conducted on the basis of recent literature and direct collaboration with specialists in the areas of reference in the practical modules of the project; (b) artistic production arising on the basis of work on the practical models within the project; and (c) critical reflections on the processes and results of the project, where the project itself becomes the object of analysis. The objective of the project is to develop a platform for understanding, exchanging and creating new creative strategies by way of response to concrete social situations and states of affairs, and the activation of them in the real tissue of society.

MODULES: The artistic production of the project is organised according to modules. Each module has its own specific manner of approaching the topic and through a practical process, inside each module, various methodologies and ways of analysing the results develop. The modules are complementary, making up the whole of the project, but also function independently (an exhibition, a book, theoretical debate, Web site and so on) or in combination with one or several other modules of the project at the same time. Presentations and analysis of the modules unfold in parallel with their creation.
